CONSTRUCTION UPDATE – SYDNEY PORT BOTANY TERMINAL 3

Works Undertaken

Construction activities that have taken place on the Terminal 3 site during July 2013 are outlined below:

- Noise wall construction has continued with the Hebel panels being progressively installed
- Commissioning of SICTL automated stacking cranes has continued
- Small areas of Saltmarsh within Penrhyn Estuary have been relocated to the northern side of the estuary in preparation for drainage works adjacent the future rail yard. The relocation was undertaken by our Saltmarsh and wetland ecologist, Dragonfly Environmental, who have been engaged previously with Penrhyn Estuary rehabilitation works.
- Landscaping works have begun on the rock revetment with a variety of plants to be situated in front of the noise wall on the northern and eastern portions of the site.
- Electrical substation and drainage works are continuing including installation of the Stormwater Quality Improvement Devices (SQIDs). The SQIDs will allow for treatment of Terminal 3 stormwater once the facility is operational.
- Services works have proceeded across the site which encompasses electrical, and potable water infrastructure
- Concrete batch plant and paving operations have continued. The benefits of having this plant on site is the ability to keep concrete trucks off the surrounding road networks and avoid impacting local residents and road users
- Ground improvements have continued in the future rail siding to allow installation of track later this year.

Concrete works being undertaken on the quay side of the new terminal.

Coming Up

Laing O'Rourke will continue with the work activities listed above.
